Community Workforce Solutions, Inc. (CWS), a nonprofit organization dedicated to supporting individuals with disabilities or other barriers to employment, announces the launch of Clean Start Diaper Service with weekly home delivery and pickup of cotton diapers. Free in-home consultations are also available to train parents-to-be on the use of cloth diapers.

The new division offers an affordable, green alternative for Triangle parents. Clean Start Diaper Service will offer both cleaning and delivery. The diaper service will offer customers the opportunity to do something good for the environment and their baby, and it will also provide valuable training to CWS program participants as they prepare to transition into the workforce.

“This is a win-win for the community, CWS, and the individuals we serve because it fulfills a local need and enables us to provide training and directly transferrable skills to individuals with disabilities, said Roger McGee, president and executive director of Community Workforce Solutions. “We are continuously searching for new ways to provide real-world training for adults with disabilities, and this model fits that description perfectly.”
